EMPLOYER NEWS

Hi from Syndhia Javier on the Employer & Alumni Relations team! Last week, we attended the NYC Tech Talent Pipeline Summit, where we heard from employers such as Goldman Sachs, Stack Overflow, and Verizon, and other schools in the New York City on how students can better prepare for job opportunities in this sector. One of the recruiters mentioned “It is not enough to be good anymore ... In order to be found, you have to be findable.” For those in computer science, this may include creating an account on Github or attending Meetups, but you can work on building your social presence by using the resources on the CCE website such as developing a LinkedIn profile or conducting informational interviews with those in your area of interest. Another company rep said, “Programming is a social activity. Student needs to get comfortable with not only writing code, but editing someone else’s code, and receiving feedback as well.” Being able to communicate your thought process is important in any field, and you can schedule a mock interview with one of our counselors to practice talking through your experience year round!

CAREER TIP OF THE WEEK

Hello from Don Goldstein on the Graduate Student Career Development team! Have you checked out Lynda.com? As a Columbia student you have free access to the website, which has online video tutorials to help you learn software, creative and business skills.
