My Columbia Film & Media Studies degree prepares me to...

Situate and analyze films and film theory in aesthetic, historical, technological, economic, and sociopolitical context

Draw connections between film and other forms of art

Understand and apply key principles of visual storytelling

Analyze and interpret visual and multimodal information

Begin writing a script and making a short film

Communicate complex ideas orally, visually, and in writing

Articulate the process and intention behind a project

Engage with polemics within contemporary art or performance

Conduct research using primary and secondary sources
